The Library of Congress' Digital Preservation Program creates usefull information on digital preservation and makes it available to all of us. If you think that personal information we create today has value for the future be sure to check this out.

Our photo albums, letters, home movies and paper documents are an important link to the past and chances are that you want to keep some of these for your children or grandchildren.

To ensure that your digital materials last a lifetime the Library developed this brochure with basic steps to get started on preserving your digital memories. You can download the Personal Archiving Brochure on their website www.digitalpreservation.gov
